

Is it fair to say that people choose their government when in fact none who I have ever met had any say in the form of government to which they were subject?

Indeed, the very concept of governments has once again been corrupted and marginalized so as to be especially ineffective at impacting the daily lives of their respective citizens. What I see in the world today is plethora of monarchies each of whom plays the great game according only to what they can get away with in the jurisdictions where they do business.

When multinational businesses exceed the GDP of entire nations it is imperative for the free people of the world to recognize that company as a form of government imposed upon them by the elite, no different in its function of oppression from previous forms of monarchy.

Who tells you where to be in the morning? Who tells you what to think about all day? No really, think about it. Does the government control our lives, or do they bestow that loathsome title on the little monarchies who rob us all of our worth as human beings and wring every last drop of value from our blood.

In my opinion, free citizens of the Earth should stand up and demand better treatment, an equal voice, and an equal share of the surpluses brought by their labor. Next time a capitalist offers you a discount you would do well to remind them how little their trinkets are really worth.
